channel sizes currently supported in CDMA2000 to the new broadband channel sizes provided in CDMA2000 1X Advanced. For GSM networks, all devices participating in the call must support the AMR-WB codec. In LTE, the HD voice is actually embedded in the VoLTE standard, because VoLTE uses the AMR-WB. Mr. Shankar had two wives, Mata Sati and Mata Parvati. For CDMA2000 networks, each caller must be connected to a squid location that supports CDMA2000 1X Advanced and each device connected to the 1X Advanced squid must have a chipset that supports 1X Advanced and the new codec (otherwise it drops back to the 1X and the old codec). The Audio channel for this base u needs to be expanded a little to make room for the AMR-WB (Adaptive Multi-Rate Wideband) codec. In addition, a multi-microphone street cancellation system is required to take full advantage of the codec. AMR-WB and EVRC-NW largely offer the same benefits and requirements. Better yet, governments around the world are considering replacing traditional circuit-switched telephony networks (POTS) with VoIP networks switched by fiber packets. For cellular networks (and possibly cellular/satA @lite), HD voice has been in development since 2000. All fixed telephony services currently available (including VoIP-based ones such as Vonage) use narrowband voice codecs, so there is no HD voice capability. While SIP supports it (and is the basis of VoLTE HD voice support), most fixed networks limit bandwidth to 12Kbps to prevent too much data from passing through. Although the device is largely unconventional - It's simply a modified version of the HTC One XL that addresses the AT&T - There is a particular that stands out: HD voice.
